

Things People Say That Reflect Attitudinal Barriers

Dr. Erik Carter

From the Boston College presentation on October 4, 2017,
"From Barriers to Belonging: The Church and People with Disabilities

- x "It seems like a lot of energy and effort when we can't really be sure that Louise will actually get anything out of being in Sunday school with the other children."
- x "We have a special class for children just like your son."
- x "These renovations seem a bit much. After all, we don't have any people with disabilities in our congregation."
- x "I'd love to invite my neighbor to attend our church, but we just don't have a program for people with disabilities."
- x "Maybe your family would feel more comfortable at Temple Beth-El. I believe they do disability ministry."
- x "Some members of the congregation are finding your group to be distracting. Perhaps you and your clients would be more comfortable sitting in the balcony."
- x "Our church just isn't big enough to have a disability ministry."
- x "Sandy really doesn't understand the meaning of communion. I'm not sure we can really allow her to participate."
